Market Review

In October, interest rates and inflation dominated investors' minds as the global economy settles into low but positive growth for 2023. Inflationary pressures have slowed considerably but not enough to allow rate cuts soon – central banks will keep interest rates higher for longer to curb inflation. The debate was whether these metrics point to a soft landing or a recession for the US economy. European economic growth is slowing due to the cumulative and lagged impacts of monetary policy. The US economy continues to outperform expectations, but this strong growth cannot be extrapolated forward as a 'higher for longer' rates environment will inevitably weigh on the economy. The labour market is cooling and consumer strength is waning, pointing to a loss of momentum. The Bank of England and the European Central Bank followed the US Federal Reserve's lead by holding rates in October. The notable surprise came from the Bank of Japan, which removed the 10-year yield curve control (YCC) band of +/-50bps, with 1% being a "reference" point, not a ceiling. It is thus stepping towards a removal of YCC for the first time since its 2016 inception.

On Fundamentals, the US economy has surprised to the upside by the resilience of its growth and consumer health in November while in Europe and the UK, the worst of the monetary policy pain appears to be currently felt by the consumer. Earnings results for the third quarter of 2023 presented a mixed picture. In the US, quarterly year-on-year revenue growth came in below expectations but operating margins expanded for the first time since the first quarter of 2021. In Europe, balance sheets generally remained robust, with leverage at the low end of historical ranges. Technicals are broadly supportive across all three markets, driven by demand and supply tailwinds. On a relative basis, euro-denominated investment-grade credit screens attractive versus other parts of the corporate credit markets. Euro credits significantly lagged the move seen in US dollars and UK sterling, both in spreads and yields. We think they have more room for compression, especially in an increasingly probable soft landing scenario.

In December, global investment grade company fundamentals remain resilient as the macroeconomic environment adjusts to lower inflation and the potential for interest-rate cuts. The combination of moderate growth, slowing inflation and a central-bank bias towards easing creates a powerful tailwind for bond markets. Earnings results for the third quarter of 2023 presented a mixed picture, but corporate fundamentals remain resilient at this stage of the cycle. Technicals in the US and Europe remain supportive, driven by both strong demand and modest supply. Retail demand in the US tends to correlate with positive returns and should persist into 2024, and foreign demand expectations continue to be supportive. Recent trends in European investment grade demand, led by insurance flows and fixed maturity funds, also look set to continue.

Spreads have meaningfully tightened year on year, with global investment grade corporate spreads closing at 115bps, 32bps tighter throughout 2023.

Investment outlook

Investment grade credit continued to rally with the pro-risk trend of declining inflation, signalling to investors that tight monetary conditions may unwind earlier than anticipated. Central banks appear to be done with rate hikes, barring an unexpected upturn in inflation, and should start cuts in 2024. Earnings in the third quarter were broadly supportive of corporate resilience. Strong expected demand should also be a supportive technical. While valuations appear somewhat rich on a headline basis, there are idiosyncratic opportunities and pockets of value.
